Supreme Court Decides Locators May

Hold All Veins Apexing in Claim. Denver, Colo., May 28.-A decision handed down by the United States Supreme Court at Washington yesterday, sustaining the decision of the supreme court of Colorado in the case of the Calhoun gold mining company against the Ajax Gold Mining comuany, is regarded in mining circles here as of special importance, in that it forever settles the question of the ownership of all lodes and veins found within the boundaries of a legally established mining claim. The court holds that a locator of a mining claim holds all veins apexing within the boundary of his claim, without respect to cross or paralel veins, so that between two conflicting lode locations the senior would take all the veins apexing within the conflict.
